The Alaska Scientific Crime Detection Laboratory (SCDL) has identified an error in the calculated value of 48 of 663 quality assurance standards prepared by the SCDL and utilized in the statewide breath alcohol program. The occurrence of this error spans the time frame from February 16th 2006 to December 23rd 2009. All 2,465 tests administered that utilized affected standards have been reviewed. Two cases have been identified that may have been affected. Attached is a list of all subject tests by agency/agency case number performed using these standards. An explanation of the two specific cases possibly affected is also attached.

The Quality Assurance Standard

The SCDL prepares dry gas cylinders used as the external quality assurance standard for all DataMaster cdm instruments in use by law enforcement in the State of Alaska. This external quality assurance standard is part of each subject test performed. The value of the quality assurance standard is determined at the SCDL and corrected to standard barometric pressure to determine the target value for that standard. When a quality assurance standard is sent for use in a DataMaster cdm, a verification of calibration (VOC) is performed to ensure the instrument is capable of detecting ethanol within the instrumental specifications of +/- 0.010 of the stated value of the quality assurance standard.

When the quality assurance standard is prepared, it is tested ten times, the ten values are averaged, and the resulting value is adjusted to standard barometric pressure using the following formula:

Target Value = [(Standard Pressure/experimental pressure)]*(average value of standard)

Example:

A standard is prepared, and the average value of the standard is determined to be 0.080 at 31.00 inches of mercury (barometric pressure). Standard barometric pressure is 29.92 inches of mercury.

Target value = [(29.92/31.00)]*(0.080)
Target value = 0.077

The quality assurance standard would be labeled with a target value of 0.077. When placed into service with an instrument, this value would be programmed into the DataMaster cdm. The DataMaster cdm would accept quality standard readings within +/- 0.010 of the programmed value (0.067-0.087).

In December 2009 it was determined that some quality assurance standards had been corrected in the wrong direction due to the ratio of standard pressure to experimental pressure being inverted. This condition was traced back to a change on February 16th 2006 in a spreadsheet formula utilized to perform this calculation.

The error resulted in an adjustment to the target value in the opposite direction of what should have been. Utilizing the previous example, this would have resulted in a target value of 0.082.

Target value = [(31.00/29.92)]*(0.080)
Adjusted value: = 0.082.
The quality assurance standard would have been labeled 0.082, and when programmed into a DataMaster cdm, a range of 0.072-0.092 would have been accepted.

To determine the impact (if any) this had on subject tests, the following measures were taken:

1. All quality assurance standards prepared on days of barometric pressure differences significant enough to affect the target values of the quality assurance standard from February 16th 2006 to December 23rd 2009 were checked to identify which standards were incorrectly adjusted.
2. Subject tests performed where the quality assurance standard was affected were analyzed to identify if any existed where the quality assurance standard would have resulted in a "Standard Out Of Range" status message.

Corrective Actions

No documentation existed as to how the correction to standard barometric pressure of the quality assurance standards should have been performed. In addition, since this calculation was performed "behind the scenes" in a spreadsheet formula based on the average of ten tests, there was no technical review of the determined target value.

The procedure manual for the preparation and testing of quality assurance standards will be updated to include the actual mathematical formula in use, and to add a technical review of the determined target value.

Possible Affected Tests

- AST/Fairbanks, 06-32887, 4/23/2006, 04:06.
- Anchorage PD, 06-29643, 6/25/2006, 03:18.

In both of these cases the test sequence proceeded normally through blank, internal standard, first test of the external standard, blank, subject test and blank. In both instances the second test of the external standard should have resulted in a "Standard Out Of Range" status message due to the result being 0.011 lower than the target value. It is possible to produce these results by failing to turn on the dry gas external standard cylinder.

The previous external standard and subsequent subject tests that occurred within an hour of the tests in question, completed successfully, indicating the instrument was functioning properly and the external standard was within acceptable range. From this data, it is likely that the breath test operator failed to turn on the external standard for this subject test, resulting in a low reading of the second external standard.

During a normal subject test on the DataMaster cdm the testing sequence is automatic and can not be altered. The instrument will proceed to the next step in the sequence only if the previous step has successfully completed. In the two tests stated above the initial quality assurance procedures and subject test all completed successfully, therefore there is no reason to believe the instrument was calibrated incorrectly or not functioning at the time of the two subject tests in question.
