Alaska Department of Public Safety Highlighted through TV Productions

(ANCHORAGE, Alaska) — This past Sunday, National Geographic aired a show called “Lockdown: Alaska Bush Troopers.” A small film crew followed troopers from Western Alaska as they responded to calls for service and transported prisoners between rural correctional facilities and community holding cells.

In recent years, the Alaska State Troopers and the Alaska Wildlife Troopers were “discovered” by production companies from the Lower 48. Village Public Safety Officers are also garnering attention from the production companies due to the unique working relationship they have with troopers. These productions give a unique view of the incredible work troopers accomplish.
